THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 5, 1873.

A change of regime for Ireland is a proposal which the British public is not quite prepared to entertain. It savours somewhat of impatience. It may come to be needed, but this is not the most fitting time for it. The wisest suggestions must be set aside as unwise when they are inopportune. It chances sometimes that, after a constitutional disease has been arrested by the vigorous treatment of one medical man, the sequelæ of that disease, usually extremely troublesome, attract the notice and elicit the recommendations of (another medical man not, perhaps, professionally called in, but on terms of considerable intimacy with the patient's family. There may be sound sense in these recommendations, but they may, nevertheless, be premature. Earl Russell, at an advanced age, of a very active and useful public life, has laid himself open, in our judgment, to the charge of having somewhat hastily interposed for the purpose of securing for Ireland the kind of government which he believes her present condition demands. Of course, he is courageous and self-confident, and, we may say also, of course there is much in his diagnosis and his prescription which claims for them serious consideration. The main objections to what he has volunteered to suggest lies in its untimeliness. Though an old man, he is, in some respects, apt to be a little in advance of the necessities of the occasion. On Monday night, in the House of Lords, he moved the second reading of a bill of his own for the better government of Ireland. Having previously described, on the first reading, the principal scope and features of his measure, he not unnaturally abstained from saying a single word in support of it, reserving for himself the right of answering objections at the close of the debate. The question, however, was put by the Lord Chancellor, and no Peer rose to speak. He declared the "not-contents" to have it, and the bill was rejected. The noble Earl, owing probably to the infirmity of deafness, was thus taken by surprise, and, in indulgence to so venerable and venerated a statesman of the Empire, he was permitted to make that statement which, under ordinary circumstances, he would have made in support of the recond reading. There was a slight debate, and the question was put a second time from the Woolsack; but, as may be supposed, it was negatived without a division.

Whatever may be said of the provisions of Earl Russell's measure, it can hardly be contended that the state of Ireland at the present time precluded him from calling attention to the subject. When in one part of that country riotous disturbance has taken place, of such extent and severity as to endanger hundreds of lives and to entail actual injury upon large numbers of people; when in other parts of the same country agrarian outrages, though fewer than they were, cannot be punished because juries, owing to intimidation, refuse to convict culprits upon overwhelming evidence; and when a large portion of the population testify by the mode in which they exercise the electoral franchise that they view with general distrust all Imperial legislation on their behalf, no one can reasonably deny that there is something unsatisfactory in the existing state of things. It does not follow, however, that, much as this condition of facts and of feeling in Ireland is to be deplored, immediate and specific legislation is the true remedy for it. Possibly, not too little, but too much, attention has been given by the present Parliament to the variable phases of popular feeling in the sister isle. There is a possibility of developing a morbid consciousness by too great and prolonged a treatment of unpleasant symptoms. Earl Russell's proposals erred chiefly in this respect. Ireland does not really need further legislative treatment, but a strict regimen and rest. We do not mean, of course, that she should be dealt with in severity. We mean only that what has been done for her-and great things have been done for her-should now, and for some time, be allowed to operate, and should not be subjected to changes of treatment supposed to be adapted to the passing moods and temper of her people.

It is quite clear that the material condition of Ireland is rapidly improving. She is deriving unquestionable benefit from those heroic remedies which Parliament has applied to her case. The means of regular subsistence for her population are more widely diffused than formerly, and are more easily available. Tenants are tolerably secure in their holdings, and, relying upon the protection of law, are more enterprising in their industry. The comforts realised by a large portion of the working population are on a higher scale than they have ever been before. It may be that there still remain anomalies to be rectified, and injustices to be redressed. But, on the whole, law has placed Ireland in a position fully as advantageous as that which is enjoyed by the people of England. Under these circumstances, the true policy is obviously to let things take their course, always premising that the administration of the law, as it stands, shall be firm and impartial. We do not think much of the cry for Home Rule. It will, perhaps, be found inconvenient at the next general election. But it is essentially hollow. It is grounded upon no want which the people of Ireland thoroughly feel. At any rate, the Imperial Parliament has fairly attempted to remove everything in the shape of real grievance. There may be some details of reform yet wanting, and these may be brought forward and considered as opportunity may serve. But if Government does its duty with ordinary moderation, tact, and wisdom, we see no reason for despairing of the ultimate condition of Ireland; and we confidently hope that, not many years hence, her people may appreciate the position in which she has been placed, and may, in temper and feeling, as well as in law, become an undivided part of the United Kingdom.

The half-yearly meeting of the British Orphan Asylum, at The half-yearly meeting of the British Orphan Asylum, at Slough, which is under the patronage of her Majesty the Queen, was held, on Thursday week, at the institution, under the presidency of the Marquis of Hertford. There was a large gathering of the friends of the institution. The Rev. The chairman then distributed the prizes and certificates.

Lord Shaftesbury presided, on Monday evening, at Exeter Hall, over a meeting called to consider the petition recently presented to Convocation in favour of confession in the Church of England. FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS. FRANCE.

(From our Correspondent in Paris.)

Thursday, July 3.

Tatis is at present entirely occupied with the coming Shah, to the exclusion of far graver and more serious subjects. The preparations for his reception are being actively pushed forward, and there is no doubt that they will be carried out with the taste and completeness which distinguish such things in France. The Duc de Broglie has asked for 350,000f, to defray the cost of the reception; and the Municipality of Paris, without voting any fixed sum for the same purpose, have decided to do all they can in the way of display. They have, therefore, appointed a committee, with unlimited powers, and have issued a full and striking programme, amongst the details of which figures the somewhat curious one of the illumination of the ruins of the Tuileries. The Shah will enter Paris by the Arc de Triomphe, and an army of workmen is engaged upon the decorations in this quarter. Masts for the display of flags are rising out of the ground in the Champs Elysées and the Place de la Concorde in all directions, and one is forcibly reminded of the week which preceded the Emperor's fête in days gone by. M. Ranc is, next to the Shah, the person occupying most of the public attention at the present moment. Where he is no one seems to know, but from his retreat he has sent forth a long and able letter of defence. In this he describes how he acted during the Commune. After trying to accommodate matters at the outset, he submitted to be elected a member for the ninth arrondissement, in the hope of being able to effect more good in that position. He admits having in that capacity signed two decrees, but gives very good reasons for this. As soon as blood was shed, however, by the Communists, in the first sortie, he resigned, and after that took no part in public affairs. The absurd canard of his possessing papers which in criminate M. Thiers he denies in toto. As to his hiding on the entry of the Versailles troops, he did so because friends of his, who had done no more than himself, were arrested; and he did not care about sharing their fate. He cannot, however, wind up without a hit at M. de Cassagnac, whom he declares to be afraid of him. This, of course, the latter has denied, and has issued a challenge in reply. In the meanwhile, despite M. Ranc's protest that to try him would be to attack the principle of universal suffrage, the preliminary preparations for his trial rie being actively pushed on. Of course, in the event of his not appearing, he will be proceeded against en contumace.

After the stormy scene in the Assembly on the subject of the civil burials we have been favoured with an interval of comparative quiet. The different committees have been working steadily, and the committee appointed to examine into the circumstances attending the election of M. Dufaure bringing forward his long-threatened motion for the immediate discussion of the constitutional bills. The prospect of this question being brought before Yesterday the matter came on for discussion, and after a smart debate—in which M. Dufaure, M. Gambetta, and M. Léon Say took part—the motion of M. Laurent, to the effect that the bills should not be referred to a committee till the members had had time to consult their constituents during the recess, was carried by a fair majority.

Pilgrimages to the shrine of the Sacred Heart at Paray-le-Monial, a little town in the south-west, are the order of the day amongst the Legitimists. A large number of the deputies of that party proceeded thither on Sunday, and formally placed themselves under the protection of the Sacred Heart. Those familiar with the history of religious manias may remember that this was the place where Marie Alacoque saw those visions which created such intense excitement during the latter part of which created such intense excitement during the latter part of the seventeenth century. On the other hand, the people of Lyons seem determined to show how they feel in the matter of the civil burials, immense crowds congregating at every funeral. On Saturday several thousand people, it is said, had assembled to follow the coffin of a child, but were dispersed by the police. Victor Hugo's "Le Roi s'amuse," on which the opera of "Rigoletto" is founded, has been prohibited at the Porte Saint Martin by General L'Admirault, and the Dix Neuvième Siècle has been temporarily suspended.

Senor Pi y Margall has completed the list of his new Ministry. In announcing the accomplishment of the task to the Cortes he said that the programme of the new Cabinet would be the same as that of its predecessor—viz., the maintenance of order, progress, and the adoption of all necessary political reforms; and he called on all the fractions of the Cortes to assist him to save the Republic and protect it against the artifices with which it was beset. The new Cabinet has laid several Constitutional and financial proposals before the Cortes, and that body has received very favourably a bill for suspending the Constitutional guarantees in the insurrectionary provinces. Resolute measures have been taken for the preservation of public order, and there is now little apprehension of any immediate action on the part of the Irreconcilables of the capital. Tranquillity has also been re-established at Seville.

The threatened rising of Carlists in Biscay seems to have actually taken place, 4000 of them having, it is reported, nominated a Government of Carlist notabilities.

VIENNA, Monday, June 30.

It is a busy and exciting time just now at the Viennese Industrial Palace and in the surrounding park. From an early hour in the morning jurors are going their rounds instituting comparisons between different art-manufactures; estimating the merit of one industrial fabric after another; tasting wines and preserved provisions; testing machinery in all its branches; examining ores, grains, and chemical products; classing musical and scientific instruments; ranking all that relates to the arts of peace while arbitrating upon the instruction and equipment of troops, military engineering, and implements of war. implements of war.

In continuance of one's route through the British section—the description of which was commenced last week—we have first to refer to Messrs. Minton's display, which, as on all similar occasions, forms an exhibition of itself. Here almost every variety of porcelain manufacture is to be met with, from a pair of splendid Paisley vases in bleu de roi, decorated with miniature paintings which have Venus for heroine, to those quieter reproductions of Henri Deux ware, with regard to which the heads of collectors appear to be completely turned. Here are vases, plates, and dishes, of apparently Indian inspiration, on which Eastern serpent-charmers are depicted exercising their craft, and Eastern beauties stand out from subdued backgrounds of tropical foliage. Of plates and vases, with cameo-looking subjects in pate-sur-pate, the famed Staffordshire firm makes a most interesting show. The designs are alike delicately modelled and gracefully composed, and ideal nymphs and cupids are grouped together with an endless variety of fancy—invariably on some sombre-toned background.

Among other subjects are nymphs with lyres, engaged in painting, entangled among bulrushes, and being unsuspectingly tripped up by mischievous cupids, who, in their turn, are caged and chained, and smothered beneath bouquets of flowers. Other dishes of the same rich coffee-coloured tint are painted over with tropical birds and flowers in a most masterly manner. Combined with remarkable freedom and breadth, there is a delicacy both of handling and colour; which latter, while sufficiently brilliant, is invariably tenderly harmonicus. Among the vases are a pair in rich turquoise blue, ornamented with birds of gorgeous plumage and delicate pink fruit-blossoms springing from graceful stems; and smaller vases in rose du Barry, spread over with tenderly-tinted leaves and pearly-white transparent flowers; while one charming pair of in rose du Barry, spread over with tenderly-tinted leaves and pearly-white transparent flowers; while one charming pair of a delicate pale blue is ornamented with flowers of various hues, and purplish green foliage in strong relief. Other vases are decorated with miniature paintings, suggested by the works of Watteau; and one especial pair, with black and gold mouldings, is remarkable for its exquisite composition of birds and flowers in tender yet brilliant colours, slightly raised from the r.ch brown ground.

Great Britain is represented in glass by Green, Pellatt and Wood, and other firms of minor note. The stall of the first named is one of the most conspicuous of the whole British named is one of the most conspicuous of the whole British section. From its centre hangs a superb chandelier, most splendidly cut, resplendent with all the prismatic tints, the weight of which is 10 cwt., and the price close upon £1000; while around hang others of somewhat smaller size but of equally fine workmanship. Among these there is one with ruby centres, which is a perfect chef-d'œuvre, Their cut and engraved table glass is also very fine, and I particularly noticed among it some beautiful gold-plated dessert dishes, formerly supplied to the Emperor Napoleon III. Among the curiosities is a tazza for use at the administration of the Holy Eucharist, which is mounted in richly-chased gold, the engraving in relief on the glass being especially beautiful. Messrs. Green also display a very elegant decanter, one of a service of glass manufactured by their predecessors, Messrs. Bacchus and Green, and first used on the occasion of the allied Sovereigns dining at the Guildhall in 1814, after the exile of Napoleon I. to Elba. Messrs. Pellatt and Woods do not make so pretentious a display, but what they show is really very good. The engraving upon their glass, designed, I am told, by the heads of the firm themselves, is remarkably light and airy, and beautifully executed. A word of commendation is due also to Messrs. Daniell, who, by means of engraving, have adapted Japanese patterns to glass ware, and whose general show of household and ornamental glass and china is of fair average merit.

The English exhibitors of cutlery have their places in the nave, while those of edge tools—with the exception of Messrs. Spear and Jackson, who occupy a place of honour in the Rotunda, where they make a very fine display, are consigned to the right-hand transversal gallery. Of the former Messrs. Brookes and Crookes have by far the most important show, and the splendid specimens of cutlery with which their handsome hexagonal case is filled have been much admired. Messrs.

Turning into the right-hand transversal gallery, at the entry of which Messrs. Sheffield is effectively repretools and steel manufactures. Sheffield is effectively represented here, and the saws, hammers, files, chisels, &c., which will be found in this gallery are unsurpassed in the whole exhibition. Foreign manufacturers come round and gaze, utterly astounded at what our great Yorkshire firms can produce. Among the exhibits of this class that of Taylor Brothers, comprising a large perforated circular saw, 7 ft. 3 in. in diameter; that of Kenyon and Co., who display some admirable edge tools; and that of Robert Smith and Co., whose crucible-cast steel files are exceptionally fine. The pen and needle trade, another of our great staple industries, is also remarkably well represented. Lower down the gallery one finds Perkins and Son's elegant baths and toilet furniture; close upon which follows the section of chemical industry, where inks, platefollows the section of chemical industry, where inks, plate-powder, dyes, and varnishes are mingled with soap, oils, and candles. Exhibits in connection with the navy and the art of war are dispersed through the rest of the gallery. "Henrys," and "Sniders," and "Chassepots," and specimens of almost every rifle, musket, pistol, or revolver in existence, fill some half a dozen cases, grouped, so to say, round a couple of gigantic anchors and a splendid muzzle-loading cannon. The largest of the former is a Martin's patent self-canting anchor, with a zigzag link-chain cable, made expressly for the Devastation, and the other, somewhat smaller, a patent Stockless anchor, both of them very fine, and the objects of much curiosity on the part of the uninitiated. By their side stands the handsome muzzle-loading steel gun exhibited by Vavasseur. This powerful engine of war weighs over five tons, and the carriage and slide upon which it is mounted more than 50 cwt. It was successfully experimented with by the English Government at Portsmouth in May, 1869, and by the French at Toulon last year, when it was fired over 250 times, principally with battering charges. Messrs. Vavasseur and Co. exhibit also numerous specimens of floating and drifting torpedoes for harbour defence, or the Singen and Mitter the largest of the surface year, when it was fired over 250 times, principlary with discovering charges. Messrs. Vavasseur and Co. exhibit also numerous specimens of floating and drifting torpedoes for harbour defence, on the Singer and M Evoy principles. This completes our survey of the right-hand transversal gallery.

THE QUEEN AND THE SHAH OF PERSIA AT THE REVIEW IN WINDSOR GREAT PARK.

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

The Shah of Persia, having exercised on the House of Commons an emptying influence for many days, brought about an opposite state of things by paying that Assembly a visit in person. On the day when the King of Kings was to come to witness the process of English law-making there was a morning sitting in the Lower House, the subject-matter being the Judicature Bill. Those who entered the Chamber at two o'clock could observe that the benches in the "gallery of honour"—that is, the place reserved for peers, diplomatists, and distinguished personages, including Monarchs and Princes on occasions—were covered with crimson cloth, with a satin border of the same hue. The reason for this was special, for the Shah, having heard that the garniture of this was special, for the Shah, having heard that the garniture of the House of Commons was green, intimated that he could not go there if he was to stand or sit on anything of that colour, which is sacred to a good Moslem. Accordingly red coverings were placed over the green morocco, and taken off the moment after the great personage departed, so that after all he did sit on something green, though it was not visible to the eye, and, by consequence, not to his inner consciousness. Towards five o'clock the assemblage in the House, which had been mediocre, began to thicken slightly, and many gentlemen got into the side galleries, which afforded "coigns of vantage" for looking at anyone sitting in the centre of the Peers' Gallery. But the largest gathering of legislators of the Peers' Gallery. But the largest gathering of legislators was in the lobby, where, in triple and quadruple line, they awaited the advent of the Shah from the House of Lords. In that chamber things went very quietly; the characteristic gravity, decorum, dulness, and unexcitability of that assembly were kept up, and so its characteristics were duly exhibited to were kept up, and so its characteristics were duly exhibited to the illustrious stranger, who, by the way, as he sat on a gilded chair by the side of the throne of the Queen of England, seemed to examine that and the canopy above it, and to come to the conclusion that it was nothing particular, its pinchbeck material having doubtless been detected by him. As the Shah entered the Commons lobby members rushed in hundreds into the House, and a space was left where the Speaker could stand, attended by the Sergeantat-Arms, to receive his Majesty. As the House was in Committee, and the Speaker out of the chair, this little ceremonial was enabled to be performed. Having ascended the rather narrow and winding staircase which leads to the Peers' Gallery (they say that he detests going up stairs), the Shah took his seat by the clock on the left side of the gallery, and his suite arranged themselves entirely on that side. No one else was arranged themselves entirely on that side. No one else was allowed in that place that day.

It happened that the subject matter in hand was whether Committee on the Judicature Bill should be brought to a close for the time; and so there was opportunity for several short speeches. Of course everything went on just as if no distinguished person was present, and, whether by accident or design, members contrived to give the Shah tastes of all their qualities and all their peculiarities as a body. The Prime Minister was able to speak shortly twice; and there were lusty cries of "Divide!" and all that shouting which is inevitable when some want to go on and others want to close the business in hand. Something of the general feeling towards individuals was exhibited, as it were, by impulse. Thus, when Mr. Stavely Hill, who is nearly a bore, and nearly ludicrous in his manner and mode of speech, rose, there burst out sounds which can only be called yells. Committee on the Judicature Bill should be brought to a close rose, there burst out sounds which can only be called yells, and the whole assembly moved and quivered as if under the Then, when Mr. influence of a sudden shock of earthquake. N. Fowler—who in his movements is outre and grotesque, and in his voice and mode of speaking unconsciously droll—sprang up in that jack-in-a-box manner which is peculiar to him, renewed roars broke out, this time being more than half composed of laughter. All this time the Shah seemed to have been shaken from that equanimity and imperturbability which he generally tries to observe. He looked surprised, turned constantly to Sir Henry Rawlinson, and seemed to demand explanations of what was going on, probably asking whether, by some mistake, he had not been brought to look on a gathering of raving lunatics. Evidently with intention, a division was taken on the question of reporting progress; and the Shah appeared still more puzzled when he saw one set of members going out at one door and coming in at another, and vice versa; while the ceremony of "telling" and giving in the numbers was palpably more distracting still; nor did he seem to comprehend the explanation, doubtless given him by Sir Henry Rawlinson, that that singular, boisterous, physical proceeding was the culminating process of English lawmaking. As to the Grand Vizier—who unconsciously committed a breach of House of Commons order (which is that no one shall be in an erect of-Commons order (which is that no one shall be in an erect position except a person who is speaking), by standing in a respectful attitude before the Shah—he seemed to be wrapped respectful attitude before the Shah—he seemed to be wrapped in amazement, and seemed to be addressing silent prayers to Allah to deliver him from the place of peril amongst demented infidels into which he had been got. The House having gone out of Committee, the Speaker took the chair, and the Shah had the opportunity of seeing the assembly in both these phases; but, as very few people understand what is the distinction between House and Committee, it is not unlikely that his Majesty was in as hopeless a state of noncomlikely that his Majesty was in as hopeless a state of noncom-prehension of the peculiarity as of anything else that he witnessed. Nevertheless he was evidently amused. He even smiled; and he lingered until the morning sitting was sus-pended, and, the Speaker having left the chair for a while, pended, and, the Speaker having left the chair for a while, members rapidly dispersed.

On Wednesday there was a very unusual occurrence, which, it is believed, has had no parallel but once since morning sittings were invented. It happened that the two bills which stood first for hearing went off unexpectedly, and way was made for Mr. Newdegate's Monastic and Conventual Institutions Bill. He started off with his speech, intended to be as tong and as portentous as possible; but the Juich Roman. long and as portentous as possible; but the Irish Roman Catholic members, who had not expected the measure to come on that day, were desirous of stopping its progress. Accordingly, soon after one o'clock, the House being very thin, a notice was taken that forty members were not present. The Speaker, having "counted," found only thirty-seven legislators in their places. In ordinary circumstances he would at once have adjourned the House; but this would at once have adjourned the House; but this was a morning sitting, and the rule is that no adjournment by counting can take place until four o'clock; consequently the Speaker had to resume his seat, where he would have continued to be imprisoned, like the Lady in "Comus," in her enchanted chair, until four o'clock chimed. The right hon, gentleman did not like the prospect before him, and it is understood that he communicated with the "whips" on each side and asked them to bring in sufficient members to on each side, and asked them to bring in sufficient members to form a quorum, so that business might be resumed. Great difficulty was found in inducing the Irish members to return to difficulty was found in inducing the Irish members to return to the House, but in about twenty minutes the requisite forty were driven in, the spell was dissolved, and Mr. Newdegate resumed his speech. Some people say that, if they had been in the Speaker's situation, they would have preferred an hour and a half of silent contemplation in his chair to listening, or seeming to listen, to Mr. Newdegate's speech. An evident intention to "talk out" the bill failed. PARLIAMENTARY SUMMARY.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Lord Stanhope did not succeed, yesterday week, in inducing the House to vote for the establishment of an order of merit, to be conferred on men distinguished in science, literature, or art. The Duke of Argyll promised that something should be done towards the prevention of loss of life caused by wild beasts in India. A motion brought forward by the Marquis of Salisbury for copies of the correspondence between the War Office and the Corporation of Oxford relative to the purchase of a site for a military dépôt, though opposed by the Marquis of Lansdowne, was agreed to.

On Monday the Duke of Cambridge entered into an explanation with the view of exonerating the Horse Guards from all blame for the irregularity contained in the Parliamentary return relating to chest measurements of recruits. He said the blame Earl Russell, in moving the second adhered to the regulations. Earl Russell, in moving the second reading of his bill for the better government of Ireland, endervoured to justify its introduction, and repeated and supplemented his former reasons therefor. He declared that Ireland was at present governed by the Pope and Cardinal Cullen. He also compared the state of Ireland with that of Scotland, and assorted the state of Ireland with that of Scotland, and asserted that England had lavished money on Scotland and had done nothing for Ireland. After Lord Kimberley had argued against the bill and several other noble Lords had spoken, the motion was negatived without a division.

It having become known that the Shah had determined on visiting the Houses of Parliament on Tuesday, there was an unusually large attendance of members in the House of Lords. A lively conversation took place on the existing system of recruit-

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

On Friday, June 27, the Home Secretary informed Mr. Plimsoll that the returns of the men imprisoned for refusing to go to sea would be issued in a few days; and that the solicitor to the Treasury would prosecute the owners of the Druid for sending that vessel to sea in an unseaworthy state. The House then went into Committee of Supply, and agreed to a vote of £1,105,348 for Post-Office packet service, and £542,220 for Irish education. The former vote did not include the sum payable under the contracts for the conveyance of the mails between the Cape and Zanzibar and Aden. In Committee on the Lyrica Bill the Attentory Control referring to an expendent between the Cape and Zanzibar and Aden. In Committee on the Juries Bill, the Attorney-General, referring to an amendment discussed at the last sitting of the Committee, undertook to bring up a new clause providing that the expense of carrying out the Act should be defrayed by the Treasury out of moneys to be voted by Parliament—an intimation with which Mr. Lopes expressed satisfaction. On clause 52, relating to the number of the jury, the Attorney-General stated that he was still of opinion that the number should be saven; but, finding that the Ludges that the number should be seven; but, finding that the Judges and leading men at the Bar were in favour of twelve, and as the point was not a vital one, he would not press the proposal. With regard to verdicts, he thought the time had gone by for requiring absolute unanimity, and that the decision of a majority was sufficient; but he was ready to abide in that respect also by the wish of the Committee. He contended, however, that all juries ought to be of a composite character, and contain a definite proportion of special and common jurors. He moved, therefore, to amend the clause by providing that every jury should consist of twelve persons, four being special and eight common jurors. After some discussion, the Attorney-General gave way, the amendment was withdrawn, and the clause itself struck out of the bill. On reaching the sixty-fifth clause the Chairman reported progress. The Canada Loan Guarantee Bill and the Court of Queen's Bench (Ireland) Grand Juries Bill were read the third time and passed; and, a resolution providing for the expenses under the Supreme Judicature Bill having been agreed to, the sitting was suspended. On resuming, at nine o'clock, Mr. M'Laren proceeded to move a resolution on Church rates in Scotland, when the House was counted out.

Mr. Gladstone explained to Mr. M'Clure, on Monday, the terms on which the Government would advance money to the Irish railway companies. On the motion for going into Committee on the Supreme Court of Judicature Bill, Mr. Gladstone, forestalling an amendment which stood upon the paper in the name of Mr. Bouverie, announced that the Government were prepared to introduce in the bill clauses providing that the final Court of Appeal to be constituted for England should also be the final Court of Appeal for Scotland and Ireland. The right hon, gentleman was not prepared forthwith to state in detail by what means this result was to be obtained; but he urged the House at once to proceed with the bill in Committee, upon the understanding that the new clauses indicated should introduced without loss of time. Mr. Bouverie expressed his satisfaction with this proposal; but Mr. Disraeli suggested that the debate should be adjourned until the whole scheme and the matured opinions of the Government" were before the House. After some further discussion, Mr. Ward Hunt embodied it in a formal amendment, upon which the House divided, and the amendment was rejected by 192 votes against 170. The House then went into Committee, and made some progress. The National Debt Commissioners (Annuities) Bill, the Public Works Loan Commissioners (School and Sanitary Loans) Bill, and the Consolidated Fund, &c. (Permanent Charges Redemption), Bill were read the second time.

There was a morning sitting on Tuesday, at which the Committee on the Supreme Court of Judicature Bill was taken. mittee on the Supreme Court of Judicature Bill was taken. The consideration of clause 5 was resumed, and the Attorney-General's amendment, striking out the additional Vice-Chancellor, which was discussed by anticipation on the previous evening, was proposed and carried by 141 to 73. A subsequent amendment, moved by the Attorney-General, giving power-to the Government to appoint three new Judges in the Equity division, in place of Judges to be appointed to the High Court of Appeal, gave rise to much controversy; but ultimately it was agreed to. On clause 6, the constitution of the Court of Appeal, Mr. Walpole appealed to Government to postpone it until the changes necessary for the extension of the bill to until the changes necessary for the extension of the bill to Scotland and Ireland were forthcoming; and Mr. Gladstone, in answer, stated the substance of the proposal to appoint to the Court of Appeal one member of the legal profession, and one ex-officio member, from each country. At this stage the Shah and a numerous suite arrived, and remained in the gallery over the clock during the rest of the sitting, watching the proceedings with much attention and apparent interest. On Thursday, when the House went into Committee upon the Supreme Court of Judicature Bill, Mr. Disraeli opened the proceedings by a speech of considerable length, in which he criticised unfavourably many of the provisions of this bill, and concluded by saying that the Government had dealt with a subject of great difficulty, but the details were carried out in an imperfect manner, and the Government would do well if they took more time to consider them, especially after the enormous concessions which had been made. Mr. Gladstone replied at equal length in defence of the bill, and in expressing the determination of the Government to persevere with it. The remaining clauses then occupied the attention of the Committee for the rest of the sitting.

LAW AND POLICE.

TRIAL OF THE TICHBORNE CLAIMANT FOR PERJURY.

TRIAL OF THE TICHBORNE CLAIMANT FOR PERJURY.

Among the witnesses examined on Friday week were officials who produced the records bearing on the now famous card case at Brighton, which the defendant made such a prominent feature in his evidence on a previous trial. It was stated that in the prosecution of the Brooms the name of Tichborne was never mentioned. Mr. Weatherby proved from the Racing Calendar the dates of the Brighton Races from 1849 to 1852, while the Deputy-Clerk of Assize for the Home Circuit and the chief superintendent of police at Brighton deposed as to the trial. Miss Weld came up from the Convent of the Good Shepherd at Bristol to tell what she had observed of Roger Tichborne, which was comparatively little. During two visits to Tichborne, in 1851 and 1852, she had conversed with him occasionally. Her recollection was quite clear against the defendant being at all like him. Captain Nangle, who as a boy had been a playmate of Roger, and had last seen him in 1849, gave a racy description of his personal appearance. "His shoulders," said the Captain, "were like a champagne-bottle." Defendant did not in the least degree resemble him. An Irish witness with a rich brogue—Jeremiah Healey, of Clonnel—had, while billiard-marker at the Tipperary County Club, often seen Roger change his clothes. He swore to having seen a bluish mark on one of his arms. Mr. Scott, who had been infirmarian at Stonyhurst from 1841 to 1858, deposed that he was shown a tattoo mark on Roger's arm, and, as far as he could remember, it consisted of a cross, an anchor, and a heart. Mr. Alfred Burrows and Mr. Whitaker Bush detailed the circumstances under which Roger's will had been drawn. Roger himself had given long written instructions to, and been on one occasion more than two hours in consultation with, Mr. stances under which Roger's will had been drawn. Roger himself had given long written instructions to, and been on one occasion more than two hours in consultation with, Mr. Burrows. It was stated that for a layman he showed more than usual knowledge of the details of the settlement. During the day Dr. Kenealy renewed his application to the Court to recall Mr. Gibbes, the Australian witness, who, he said, was about to leave the country. The Lord Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Mellor agreed that there was no ground for the application.

Justice Mellor agreed that there was no ground for the application.

On Monday Mrs. Whitgrave, a school companion of Lady Radcliffe and a visitor at Upton, deposed to having seen the tattoo mark on Roger. She remembered that it was in the drawing-room, and that three young ladies were present—to the best of her belief, Miss Doughty was one of them. Several officers from Lloyd's testified to the Claimant's having called there with two friends, who searched the records for entries of the Bella. Mr. Stephenson, the superintendent at Lloyd's, produced the entry respecting the loss of the Bella, and showed on the map where the long-boat was picked up. He disposed of the theory that the Osprey, of Glasgow, had picked up the Claimant by stating that it arrived in Table Bay—twenty days' sail further south—on the very day that the wreckage of the Bella was discovered. Witness also produced all other entries as to vessels of the name of Osprey, showing that none of them would tally with the Claimant's account of his rescue. Mr. Vining, of Liverpool, one of the managing owners of the Bella, and Mr. Killey, a part owner, who had also superintended the building of the vessel, supplied all the information that had reached them respecting her loss. They scouted the idea of her having 12 ft. of water in her hold before it was discovered. Against the Claimant's assertion that he and the survivors cruised about for several days before being picked up, they set their own opinion that no boat had ever been launched at all. Mr. Vining stated that from the time the ship went down, in April, 1854, the proprietors had received no tidings of the vessel, captain, or crew. The insurance had been paid as upon a total loss, and no claim Irad been made by anyone professing to have been on board. Mr. Cooper, who had been shipping reporter to the Melbourne Argus when the Claimant alleges that he landed in Australia, stated that the Osprey arrived at Geelong, and not at Hobson's Bay, the two places being eighty miles apart.

Tuesday's proceedi

Geelong, and not at Hobson's Bay, the two places being eighty miles apart.

Tuesday's proceedings began with the evidence of Mr. Cooper, who had been, in 1853 and 1854, reporter to the Melbourne Argus, and whose duty it was to board all vessels upon their arrival in quest of news. He was of opinion that if a vessel such as the Osprey had arrived with a shipwrecked crew on board her he should most certainly have heard of the fact, and he was quite clear that he had heard nothing of the sort. Mr. Gibbes, of Wagga-Wagga, was recalled, and was questioned at some length by both Bench and counsel. Lady Radeliffe was also recalled to speak to the hopeless state of Lady Doughty's health when she made her deposition expressing her belief that the defendant was not Roger Tichborne. During the examination of Alfred Brand, who had been a game-keeper at Tichborne, and who deposed to having seen the tattoo keeper at Tichborne, and who deposed to having seen the tattoo marks on Roger's arm, words of a very warm character passed between the defendant's counsel and the Lord Chief Justice. Much of the day's evidence was merely formal, and related to Roger Tichborne's accounts with his bankers and Army agents. A copy of the Illustrated London News, dated March 12, A copy of the Illustrated London News, dated March 12, 1853, was then put in, containing a paragraph announcing the death of Sir Edward Doughty and an account of the family. Dr. Kenealy objected that this could not affect the defendant, as it was not proved that he saw it; but the jury observed that it had been proved that the Illustrated London News was taken at the reading-room at Wagga-Wagga; and the Lord Chief Justice observed that it was admissible, as showing the source whence the defendant may have derived such particulars as he may have stated respecting the family, and a paper like the Illustrated London News, with its interesting illustrations, was peculiarly likely to be read. It was pointed out that the paragraph, as is usual in the obituaries of the Illustrated London News, was headed with a woodcut containing the arms of the family. The copy of the Illustrated London News of June, 1862, containing the obituary of Sir James Tichborne, was then put in, which, in like manner, was headed by the arms of Tichborne. This was put in and read to show the source from which it was suggested the de-was headed by the arms of Tichborne. This was put in and read to show the source from which it was suggested the deferdant might have derived the knowledge that his mother was the daughter of Mr. Seymour, and also the fact of the births and deaths of the two daughters, and other particulars he had mentioned. Then the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS of March 3, 1866, containing the obituary of Sir Alfred Tichborne, was put in. The defendant did not leave Australia until September, 1866.

Mr. James Bowker, of London, solicitor to the late Lady Tichborne, was the first witness called on Wednesday. He described at length her Ladyship's communications to him respecting her supposed son, and the action he had taken on her behalf. With regard to the first letter from the Claimant, inclosed in one of Gibbes's, he had written to her that "he was afraid the whole business was an impudent attempt at extortion." The end of his inquiries and attempts to dissuade her from committing herself was that her door was closed against him. Miss Hales, the lady whom defendant professed to have paid him. Miss Hales, the lady whom defendant professed to have paid his addresses to at Canterbury, appeared in the witness-box to deny all knowledge both of him and of Roger Tichborne. Lady Dormer, a cousin of Roger, who had been in frequent communication with him at Upton, London, and elsewhere, affirmed that she had seen the tattoo marks frequently, and had always spoken about them as a matter of notoriety in the family. According to her account, Roger used to be fond of showing them to his relatives. At the close a number of witnesses were examined respecting the Themis, the vessel which defendant at first said had saved him. The Liverpool broker and the Melbourne agent of that vessel deposed to the inquiries the defendant had made about her, and to the description he had given of her as well as of her arrival at Melbourne. In many given of her, as well as of her arrival at Melbourne. In many points his account tallied accurately with the facts in question; but eventually the Lord Chief Justice discounted this part of the evidence by pointing out that in the original trial the Themis seemed to have been entirely abandoned. The register

Themis seemed to have been entirely abandoned. The register and the ship's articles were, however, put in. Evidence was given to show that the Themis had no entry in her log of having picked up a shipwrecked crew of nine persons, and that if she had done so information of the fact would certainly have been given to the firm, and none had been given.

Mr. Henry Francis Purcell, a member of the Bar of the Norfolk Circuit, gave evidence of his going to Chili in 1868 for the purpose of examining witnesses before the Commission; and of his going, after the adjournment of the last trial, in 1871, to Australia. He landed at Melbourne, and visited several places in the colony, but could find no trace of any such person as Arthur Orton or Alfred Smith. Robert Jury, a lighterman, who formerly resided at Wapping, and knew the Orton family well, believed that the defendant was Arthur Orton. Dr. Brown attended Arthur Orton, when a boy, for St. Orton family well, believed that the defendant was Arthur Orton. Dr. Brown attended Arthur Orton, when a boy, for St. Vitus's dance. He was "a large, awkward, unwieldy, coarse, fat boy, and tall for his age. His hair was light, and he was weak in the knees—in-kneed." He at once recognised the defendant as an exaggerated likeness of Arthur Orton. Arthur Peter Shotler, son of the landlord of the Ship and Punchbowl, Wapping, knew Arthur Orton well, and the defendant and he were the same man. He was like his sister, Mrs. Tredgett. He was a chip of the old block; he was every inch an Orton. The Rev. Robert Mount, Catholic priest at Southampton, saw Roger Tichborne in 1853, when he was leaving for South America, and had, he believed, a perfect recollection of him. He would never take the defendant for him. In answer to the Lord Chief Justice, he said that no true Catholic would be married by a Wesleyan minister.

In consequence of the prolongation of the Tichborne trial, Justice Keating will take the North Wales Circuit, Baron Cleasby the Norfolk, and Mr. Fitzjames Stephens the Western.

Mr. Hawkins has been spending one of his off days in the Court of Common Pleas defending the Tyne Shipping Company against a curious claim for goods alleged to have been lost in transit. The prosecutor, Mr. Harnett, formerly a dentist in Panton-square, and owning, he said, a stock of 350,000 teeth, had, while out of business, stored part of them in Newcastle. Purposing to commence business in Paris, he employed the defendants to convey his effects to London. Two cases were lost in the voyage and the defendants were now such for the value. on the voyage, and the defendants were now sued for the value of their contents, assessed by the plaintiff at £6303 11s. 6d. The jury declined to take plaintiff's own evidence as to the contents of the missing cases, and a stet processus was entered.

Yesterday week Captain Hunt, ex-honorary secretary of the Tichborne Defence Fund, brought an action in the Court of Common Pleas for libel against the Times newspaper. The action was based on an assertion in that journal that he was not and had never been a Captain in the Royal Artillery, as had been erroneously described. Evidence showed that Captain Hunt had been appointed a Paymaster in the Royal Artillery, with the honorary rank of Captain; but Lord Chief Justice Bovill held that this entitled him to be described in strictness only as a Captain in the Army, and not in the particular branch of the service to which he happened to be attached. Plaintiff was accordingly nonsuited, with leave to move the full Court.

An action was brought in the Queen's Bench yesterday An action was brought in the Queen's Bench yesterday week against Diprose, one of the money-lenders in reference to whom a criminal information is pending at the Old Bailey. Then, when no money was due to him, defendant, on some pretext, seized goods worth £200, and had them sold for £50 odd. The jury found for the plaintiff, execution being ordered in four days.

During the sittings at Guildhall, last Saturday, Mr. Justice Quain complained strongly of the ill-ventilated state of the court. His Lordship declared that he could not sit there, with the burning sun pouring down upon his head, and that unless something was done to mitigate the heat he would adjourn the Court. "This is the way," continued the learned Judge, "we are always treated in this court and in the City. We complain from time to time, and we get no redress from the Corporation of the city of London. It is the most abominable hole a Judge and jury were ever put into." hole a Judge and jury were ever put into.

A verdict for £150 was given, in the Court of Exchequer, on Saturday last, against the Metropolitan District Railway Company, as compensation for injuries sustained by a Mrs. Bradford. In the course of the hearing of the action it was stated that the time originally allowed for the stoppage of the trains at each station was one minute, and for the performance of the whole journey (including twenty-one stations), sixty-two minutes. It had, however, been lately thought that a minute at each station was too long, and the time was reduced by some seconds, so as to accomplish the distance from terminus to terminus in fifty-five minutes. The number of passengers was 1,000,000 a month. The number of passengers was 1,000,000 a month.

In consequence of the frequent movements of ships of war on foreign stations, the private letters of the officers and crews have hitherto been forwarded by the Post Office to the particular place on the station at which, according to information furnished by the Admiralty, the ships were most likely to be found—the directions placed upon them by the writers being disregarded. This course, which was adopted with a view of preventing delay, appears not to have given general satisfaction, numerous complaints having been made of letters being subjected to additional postage in consequence of being sent to a place for which the amount prepaid was insufficient, although sufficient for the transmission of the letters according to the written address. It has been determined, therefore, that in future all private letters addressed to ship of war on foreign stations shall be forwarded strictly as addressed.

At a meeting of metropolitan volunteer commanding officers — Colonel the Hon, Charles Lindsay, M.P., in the chair—it has been resolved that, subject to the approval of the Secretary of State for War, a review of volunteers should be held, as usual, at Wimbledon on Saturday, July 19.

The following volunteers have been selected to represent Sectland in the coming contest for the International Challenge Trophy. The list includes, as will be seen, the names of a few Queen's prize winners:—Corporal Boyd, 2nd Ayr; Buchanan, 3rd Lanark; Sergeant Gow, Queen's (Edinburgh) Rille Brigade; Clews, 3rd Renfrew; Lieutenant Low, 1st Forfar; Captain Menzies, Queen's (Edinburgh) Rille Brigade; Alvittie, The Dumfries; Paterson, 1st Michen Hille Brigade; Alvittie, The Dumfries; Paterson, 1st Michen Hille Brigade; Colour-Sergeant were selected.

The meeting of the Irish Rifle Association ended last Saturday, at the North Bull ranges, Dollymount, having occupied three days. The first of the all-comers' prizes, at 800 yards, was won by Captain Tufnell; Mr. John M'Kenna, jun., of the Ulster Rifle Association, took second prize; Mr. S. S. Young was third. At 900 yard: Ar. J. Rigby took first prize, Mr. J. A. Doyle being second. The shooting for the extra prizes, at 1000 yards, was much interfered with by the wed, and Mr. W. Rigby came in first, Mr. Walkington being second. The Lord Lieutenant's cup, with the silver medal of the English National Rifle Association, was won by Captain Walker. The greatest interest naturally attached to the competition for the Duke of Abercoru's cap. Several smaller prizes are given, and the competitors who make the eight highest secreare to form the team to contend at Wimbledom for he Elcho shield. The total number of shots is ninety, and the highest possible score shots is ninety, and the highest possible score therefore is 360. Out of this Mr. J. Rigby made 339; but, as he has already wonthe cup, he was disqualitied from taking it, and it goes to Mr. R. S. Joyee, who scored 336. Mr. J. K. Milner made 332, Mr. E. Johnson 330, Mr. H. Fulton 327, Mr. J. S. Young 325, Mr. James Wilson 321, and Mr. W. Rigby, 318. These eight will be the champions of Ireland in the contest for the shield at Wimbledon, Captain Walker, who has scored 316, being next on the list to be held in reserve.

The following are the names (in order of merit) of the gentlemen selected in 1871, who, after two years' training in this country, have passed the "Final Examination":—W. R. Barry, North-West Provinces, 2784 marks; K. G. Gupta, Bengal, 2656; H. M. Kisch, Bengal, 2591; A. R. Birks, North-West Provinces, 2257; H. C. Fanshawe, North-West Provinces, 2257; H. C. NAVAL REVIEW AT SPITHEAD: THE ROYAL YACHT, WITH THE SHAH ON BOARD, PASSING BETWEEN THE FIRST AND SECOND DIVISIONS.

THE SHAH AT THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

BY THE WAY:

Had we been writing this paragraph in July, 1773, the events of the time being the same as those of the present week, we should probably have had to say something of this sort:—"An affair of honour came off yesterday. One of the parties was a well-known M.P. for a cathedral town in the east of England, the other was a gentleman of the Roman Catholic persuasion who was examined as a witness in the great trial now pending. Our contemporary the Times recently published an able summary of the evidence in that case, and showed that one hundred witnesses had declared the defendant not to be the person he has sworn that he is, while forty had asserted that he was the person he has sworn that he is not. In reference to this statement, the M.P., who for some reason was in the country, not at St. Stephen's, wrote a letter to the Times, in which he suggested that the whole of the testimony of the Catholic witnesses might be disposed of by imputing to them perjury, committed at the instance of the authorities of their Church, who desired to retain in Catholic hands the estates in question in the case. One of these witnesses immediately dis-Had we been writing this paragraph in July, 1773, the events Church, who desired to retain in Catholic hands the estates in question in the case. One of these witnesses immediately dispatched a military friend to the M.P., and a duel was at once arranged, the parties meeting half-way between his residence and London. We are glad to say that no unhappy results took place. The senator characteristically missed his aim, and received his adversary's ball on the head, which it happily failed to penetrate. All was settled in an amicable way, the M.P., in the handsomest manner, declaring (as, indeed, he had done in his letter) that there was no reflection upon witnesses who might merely have sworn untruly in compliance with the who might merely have sworn untruly in compliance with the dictates of religion. The parties came to London in the same post-chaise." But this is 1873, and some persons, at least, are more rational than their ancestors. Whether the defendant's counsel read the letter with feelings of deep gratitude to the writer we shall probably hear one of these days.

writer we shall probably hear one of these days.

His Majesty the Shah having now left us, and the "impression" which it was intended to produce upon him being, we trust, deeply engraven, and past obliteration, we have leisure to consider what has been said upon the subject of his visit by others than islanders. The Germans admit that we have done our work admirably, and believe that the Shah must be convinced that England is a great and terrible nation, whose friendship he should secure at any price. Russian ideas have been expounded, and they have, for obvious reasons, no value at all. The French allow that England has made a grand display of material prosperity and power; but, as they have nothing to gain by impressing the Shah, they will be content to show him something beautiful, which, of course, English taste and English climate forbid anyone to see in this country. But a curious message comes to us from afar, so far indeed as Rangoon. We have just received the Rangoon Gazette of May 23, and it contains a leading article in which the writer makes reference to the last dreadful famine in Persia. He alleges that the Monshe was entirely unmindful of the horrible sufferings of him subjects a but that the content to the content to the content of him subjects a but that the content of him subjects a but the the content of him subjects a but the the content to the content of him subjects a but the the content of the content of him subjects a but that the content to the content of the content of him subjects a but the the content to the content of the cont makes reference to the last dreadful famine in Persia. He alleges that the Monarch was entirely unmindful of the horrible sufferings of his subjects, but that "in certain towns the governors were ordered that starvation should cease, and accordingly every day men, women, and children who had the audacity to cry for bread were unceremoniously knocked on the head." This was while subscriptions from British subjects were pouring into Persia in aid of the famishing. Of course the inference is that England was about to lavish her hospitality on a potentate who is not deserving of it. We may observe that the statement above made is not supported by any evidence, and, though we have no doubt of the bona fides of the writer, the story does not seem probable. Has not some isolated act of brutality been magnified into extraordinary proportions? We incline to believe that, however powerful State reasons for all that has been done might seem, there would have been a very much more modified and official reception of the Shah had Government believed in such a statement as that from Rangoon; and our Ministers must be very ill-served by their subordinates if information on such a matter has been withheld.

British faith in the pluck and sense of Sir Samuel Baker

British faith in the pluck and sense of Sir Samuel Baker has at last been thoroughly vindicated. On Monday night Lord Granville and Lord Enfield had the gratification of read-ing to the Lords and the Commons a telegram from Alexandria announcing that a despatch from Khartoum had been received antiouning that a despatch from Khartoum had been received at the former place on Saturday last. Sir Samuel was at Khartoum in good health, with all the other Europeans, and he had conquests to report. Down to the Equator the country in which he had been campaigning had been annexed to the dominions of the Khedive, the slave-traders' intrigues had been stamped out, the route was quite open to Zanzibar, and also on June 8 a victory had been won by only 105 men over the army of Oroeso. If the arrangement of details reminds us a little of the famous anti-climar. the famous anti-climax,

In both the tropics is our language spoke, And part of Flanders hath received our yoke, no matter; the news is of general success, and when we get the despatches we shall, no doubt, be able to do more justice to the gallantry and discretion of our brave representative.

"They manage some things better in Ireland." If unfortunate authors, composers, and students, who cannot sit with windows closed when the glass is at 80 deg., and who cannot work with windows open when street organ after street organ pours in floods of "bad noise," had but a Mr. O'Donnell, of Belfast, to appeal to! He had a street musician brought before Belfast, to appeal to! He had a street musician brought before him the other day, a woman, and, though she declared that she sang songs for the support of herself and child, he sent her to gaol for a month. To be sure, her aria d'intrata was of a semipolitical character, and was in glorification of "the noble Orangeman, Mr. Johnston," who, the poet asserted, "adores the Bible, Church, and Crown, and loves the Orange and Blue," but we cannot believe that the utter nonsense of the lyric had much to do with the sentence. We prefer to think that Mr. O'Donnell has a laudable hatred for vagabonds who force unsought music upon people, and from many a "quiet street" unsought music upon people, and from many a "quiet street will be uttered the earnest wish that we had some "beak who would deal in similar fashion with our London organ nuisances. If they hindered sacred and holy trade they would be stopped in a week; but, as they only hinder mere writers and artists, and torture mere invalids, they are left to work their will, encouraged by menials and mammas.

Readers may recollect that some time ago they had the Readers may recollect that some time ago they had the pleasure of reading many advertisements by a gentleman named Dr. Vellere, who continuously asserted that he was a fine dramatist, but that managers would not give him the opportunity of displaying his genius. We were told this very often, and there was nothing improbable in the statement. There are, doubtless, many good dramatic writers who cannot get before the public. But Dr. Vellere has published one of his dramas; and, though we are not greatly concerned to find excuses for managers, many of whom have a cultivated talent for making mistakes, we think that we can see some extenuafor making mistakes, we think that we can see some extenua-tion of their conduct in regard to this gentleman. He pro-poses to set very hard tasks for the actors. Doubtless, they ought to be able to perform those tasks. But facts are facts, and we fear that a manager would have much difficulty in procuring artists who could carry out Dr. Vellere's stage directions. Of these we will give a slight sample. At t end of the third act a heroine, Kate, has a strong situation:-Kate (raising herself to herfull height). No; there are no children for such as I! (Laughs and turns suddenly serious—with auful pathos)

"The children to the Tiber!"

(She stops, and her vacant look is fully expressive of her terrible malady. At this moment the cossin becomes visible, and at its sight CONQUEST gives a terrible shriek, and falls to the ground.) Jack (pointing to the coffin). "The mother to the tomb!"

Later, Conquest, having recovered himself, again encounters the tremendous Kate. He says, with much novelty, to a young couple, "Bless you, my children." Then—

(overpowered with feelings, he staggers; and, when his eyes meet with the calm posture of KATE, he looks at her terrified, whilst the by-play of his demeanour expresses forcibly how he shrinks from

Thirdly, and with this illustration we close, Conquest has another call on his facial and other powers :-

(The BRIDE, who has not left the side of KATE, embraces her tenderly. CONQUEST, whose by-play has vividly expressed the sentiments which these incidents could but call up in his breast, was at first thunderstruck; in recognising KATE, a beam of happiness of the past seems to illumine his face; but when he sees his daughter, side by side with his son and KATE, he realises at once the horror of his position, and snatches his daughter away.)

Conquest. Away, away from him, from them—and for ever!

(A terrible struggle commences within his breast.)

Now, we think that it will be admitted that Dr. Vellere has, to use a colloquialism, cut out a good deal of work for the actors, and managerial distrust of their abilities may have had something to do with the treatment of which he complained so long and so expensively.

THE SHAH OF PERSIA.

The series of Royal, metropolitan, and other national entertainments which have been given, during the past two or three weeks, in honour of his Majesty Nasr-Ood-Deen, Shah of Persia, while the guest of her Majesty Queen Victoria, fill in the present Number, as in our last publication, all the space devoted to Engravings that illustrate the passing events of the day. We have now to deal with the most elaborate acts and scenes in this grand pageant of British wealth and power, which is certainly more significant as an exhibition of what England herself is, what she possesses, and what she can do, than imherself is, what she possesses, and what she can do, than important as a mere complimentary demonstration to the Shah—no very great personage, after all, either in Europe or in Asia, compared with some other potentates we have seen coming compared with some other potentates we have seen coming and going in London.

The Naval Review at Spithead on Monday week—the Review of the Guards and other choice troops by the Queen next day in Windsor Park—the visits of the Shah to the Royal Italian Opera, and to the Royal Albert Hall, with the adjoining International Exhibition—his sight of the shipping in the Thames and the West India Docks, on the Wednesday, with the Admiralty luncheon for him at Greenwich Hospital—his ignuracy to the North, where he saw the town and port of the Admiratty luncheon for him at Greenwich Hospital—his journey to the North, where he saw the town and port of Liverpool on the Thursday, and the town and factories of Manchester on the Friday, being the guest of the Duke of Sutherland at Trentham—and his return to London on Saturday, after which he went to the garden party of the Prince and Princess of Wales at the Chiswick villa—these proceedings of last week afford such a variety of subjects for our Illustrations that there is no fear of sameness in following the steps of the Shah on English ground.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA. ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

It was the first Saturday evening of his stay in London, as we stated last week, that the Shah went to a state performance, by order of the Lord Chamberlain, at the Royal Italian Opera, Covent-garden. His Majesty, with a numerous suite, in ten of the Queen's carriages manned by servants in state liveries, drove from Buckingham Palace, by way of Trafalgar-square, St. Martin's-lane, and Garrick-street, escorted by a detachment of the Life Guards. On arriving at the Floral Hall, which St. Martin's-lane, and Garrick-street, escorted by a detachment of the Life Guards. On arriving at the Floral Hall, which forms the vestibule to the theatre, his Majesty was met by his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, and by their Royal Highnesses the Duke of Edinburgh, Prince Arthur, and the Duke of Cambridge. The following officers of the Royal household were in attendance on his Majesty:—The Lord Steward, the Lord Chamberlain, the Master of the Household, the Vice-Chamberlain, the Clerk Marshal, the Gold Stick, the Captain of the Yeomen of the Guard, the Silver Stick, the Field Officer-in Brigade Waiting, the Controller in the Lord Chamberlain's department, two Gentlemen Ushers, and the Exon of the Yeomen of the Guard. The Earl of Morley, Lord Frederic Kerr, Colonel the Hon. Henry Byng, and Major-General the Hon. A. Hardinge also attended his Majesty. The usual guard of Yeomen of the Guard was in attendance at the theatre and upon the stage. At the entrance of the theatre the Shah was received by the Lord Chamberlain, who conducted his Majesty to the Royal box. The Persian national air was played by the band in the Floral Hall, and "God Save the Queen" was sung before the performance began. It consisted of a selection of pieces from different operas. pieces from different operas

NAVAL REVIEW AT SPITHEAD.

The Shah, with the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Russian Imperial Prince, or Cesarewitch, and the Cesarevna, sister to our Princess, the Duke of Edinburgh, and the Duke of Cambridge, attended by many persons of their several suites, went down from London to Portsmouth by a special train on the Monday morning, and embarked in the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert before eleven o'clock. They were first saluted affoat by the old wooden line-of-battle ships the Victory, the St. Vincent, the Duke of Wellington, the Asia, and the Donegal, moored near the Dockyard Pier. These ships, also the Indian troop-ships Crocodile, Serapis, and Euphrates, were completely dressed with flags. The Victoria and Albert, commanded by Prince Leiningen, with Admiral Sir Rodney Mundy manded by Prince Leiningen, with Admiral Sir Rodney Mundy in superior command, bore the Royal standard of Persia and that of the Prince of Wales together on her mainmast, the Union Jack on her bowsprit, and St. George's flag at her taffrail. She was followed by the Enchantress, with Mr. Goschen and the other Lords of the Admiralty, and by several other steamboats. The members of the House of Lords were in the Simoom, the House of Commons in the Tamar, and there was the Trinity House yacht Galatea. Two miles off the Southsea shore, at the Spithead anchorage in the Solent between the Isle of Wight and Hampshire coast, lay the assembled fleet of British ironclads, in three long parallel lines, each line from east to west extending nearly two miles. The innermost line, nearest Portsmouth, consisted of miles. The innermost line, nearest Portsmouth, consisted of twenty-four gun-boats or small vessels of war—namely, the Waterwitch, Swinger, Goshawk, Ariel, Beacon, Zephyr, Skylark, Cracker, Orwell, Bruiser, Foam, Plucky, Bloodhound, Kite, Blazer, Snake, Scourge, Bonetta, Arrow, and Comet; the Seaflower and Martin, sailing brigs. The next or central line comprised the eleven ironclads of the first division, which were the Valiant, 18 guns, Captain Bedingfield; Zealous, 20, Captain Hamilton; Hercules, 14, Captain Dowell, C.B.;

Hector, 18, Captain Cochrane; Audacious, 14, Captain Henderson; Northumberland, 28, Captain Alexander, C.B.; Agincourt, 28, Captain Adeane (flagship of Rear-Admiral Hornby, C.B.); Devastation, turret-ship, 4, Captain Hewett, V.C.; Hecate, 4, Commander Boyd; Gorgon, 4, Commander Hon. A'Court; Prince Albert, 4, Commander Bridges. The third line, which lay nearest to the Isle of Wight shore, contained the twelve ironclads of the second division, including three turret-ships. They were the Penelope, 11 guns, Captain C. Wake; Caledonian, 24, Captain Montgomerie; Black Prince, 28, Captain Lacy; Monarch, 6, Captain Boys; Vanguard, 14, Captain Spain; Achilles, 26, Captain Oldfield; Sultan, 12, Captain Vansittart, C.B.; Glatton, 2, Captain Aynsley; Hydra, 4, Commander Tinklar; Cyclops, 4, Commander Lupman; Royal Sovereign 5, Commander Cleveland. The Royal yacht, with the Royal spectators, passed from east to west between the central and outer line of ironclads, followed by the other yachts and steam-boats, and then passed from west to east between the central line and the line of gun-boats. Three general salutes were fired by the whole fleet—the first time, when the Victoria and Albert approached Spithead; the second time, at twelve o'clock, when she reached the western end of the lines; the third time, at two o'clock, when she left the fleet on her return to Portsmouth Dockyard. Between one and two o'clock the Royal yacht lay to while the Shah and the Princes and Princesses went, in a white barge of state, to inspect the flagship Agincourt, and likewise the Sultan, where the Shah was much astonished with the 18-ton 400-pounder guns on the main-deck. There was a luncheon for the Royal party at the official residence of Admiral Sir Rodney Mundy, inspect the flagship Agincourt, and likewise the Sultan, where the Shah was much astonished with the 18-ton 400-pounder guns on the main-deck. There was a luncheon for the Royal party at the official residence of Admiral Sir Rodney Mundy, and the Shah smoked a pipe on the lawn. He was afterwards taken into the dockyard to see the building of a ship to be called after him instead of the Blonde, as first proposed. The South-Western Railway brought his Majesty and their Royal Highnesses back to London at half-past seven in the evening. Our Special Artist, in the Illustration of the Fleet at Spithcad, has shown the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, with the Alberta and the Vigilant conveying the Shah's attendants, passing between the lines of ironclad war-ships. Those on the right hand are the Agincourt flag-ship, which is nearest; the Northumberland, Audacious, Hector, Hercules, Zealous, and Valiant. On the left are the Sultan, Achilles, Vanguard, Monarch, Black Prince, Caledonia, and Penelope. The turretships Devastation and Hecate, on the right hand, the Glatton and Hydra on the left, are not shown in the sketch, having been passed by the Royal yacht before the moment at which the sketch was taken; and the other steamers, Enchantress and Galatea, Tamar and Simoom, are not yet come up.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

After dining at Buckingham Palace, upon his return from Portsmouth, the Shah went to the International Exhibition, Kensington, at half past ten. He was met by the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh, and Prince Arthur, with the Marquises of Lansdowne and Ripon, Earls Granville and Carnaryon, and others, who showed him the Machinery Department and the Picture Galleries. The Shah and their Royal Highnesses, with the Princess of Wales, the Cesarewitch and the Cesarevna, afterwards heard a concert of music in the Royal Albert Hall. Their seats were placed on a dais opposite the great organ, within a decorative border of green leaves and yellow flowers. The grand amphitheatre, filled with company in brilliant attire, many gentlemen wearing uniforms, had a superb effect. The Shah had the Princess of Wales on his right hand, the Cesarevna on his left; the Prince of Wales sat on the left hand of his sister-in-law; the Cesarewitch and the Duke of Edinburgh were to the right of the Princess of Wales. The music was performed by Madame Titiens, Mr. Sims Reeves, Madame Trebelli-Bettini, and other vocalists, with the orchestra, and Dr. Stainer at the organ. Yeomen of the Guard were on duty in the Albert Hall, and there was a guard of honour outside. honour outside.

QUEEN'S REVIEW IN WINDSOR PARK.

QUEEN'S REVIEW IN WINDSOR PARK.

On Tuesday week, in the morning, the Shah had an interview with Mr. Gladstone, Earl Granville, and the Duke of Argyll, on political business. He received deputations from the cities of Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Aberdeen, the Anti-Slavery Society, the religious communions of Jews, Armenian Christians, and Parsees; and several persons connected with Indian Government were introduced to his Majesty. At three o'clock in the afternoon, having at the Paddington station met the Prince and Princess of Wales and soveral other Royal Highnesses, the Shah went to Windsor by a special train, which was slow, so that he did not get to the review-ground till five. It was in the vast lawn between Queen Anne's Ride and the Long Walk, surrounded with noble trees, which were in the full beauty of fresh summer leafage. The troops assembled for review, officers and men, numbered about 7400 of our finest soldiers. Beginning from the right of their line, there was the Royal Horse Artillery, which always claims that position; then the solid and brilliant masses of the household cavalry, the battalions of Guards, the other infantry regiments, the Dragoons, and Hussars, and, on the left flank, the batteries of Royal Artillery. Lord Strathnairn was in command of the whole line, Colonel Newton of the artillery, Sir Thomas MacMahon of the cavalry, and Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar of the infantry. The array was about three-quarters mand of the whole line, Colonel Newton of the artillary, Sir Thomas MacMahon of the cavalry, and Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar of the infantry. The array was about three-quarters of a mile long, and was completely lapped by a deep fringe of spectators stretching away right and left in a wide sweep, which left the troops ample space for their manœuvres. The space at the saluting point, reserved for the Queen and the Shah, was inclosed, and was marked by two lofty flags, the Royal standards of England and Persia. On both sides of this space were erected stands to accommodate the foreign Ministers, the Lords and Commons, and other privileged spectators. The space were erected stands to accommodate the foreign Ministers, the Lords and Commons, and other privileged spectators. The Queen came in an open carriage, with the Princess of Wales and her sister, the Imperial Princess of Russia, attended by officers and ladies of the Court and Royal household, and escorted by Scots Greys. Her Majesty was dressed, as usual, in black, with some white in her bonnet; the two Princesses had white dresses and blue bonnets. The Shah, of course, wore his dark military uniform, with a blue ribbon across his breast, which glittered with diamonds and emeralds: he had on his gold spectacles. He rode a small white Arab, the tail on his gold spectacles. He rode a small white Arab, the tail on his gold specialise. The Prince of Wales were his uniform as Colonel of the Rifle Brigade, the Cesarewitch a Russian uniform, the Duke of Edinburgh that of a volunteer artillery corps, and the Duke of Cambridge, Commander-in-Chief, that of a Field Marshal. The troops saluted and presented arms to the Queen, and lowered their colours while the National Anthem was played. lowered their colours while the National Anthem was played. The Queén's carriage, accompanied by the Shah riding with the Duke of Cambridge at his side, followed by the other Princes and the Staff, passed slowly along the line. They returned to the saluting point, and the troops marched past, the Royal Horse Artillery first, then the two regiments of Life Guards, the Royal Horse Guards, the 6th Dragoon Guards, the 7th Hussars, the 13th Hussars, the E and H batteries 14th brigade Royal Artillery, three battalions of Grenadier Guards, two of Coldstream Guards, one of Scots Fusilier Guards, the 7th Fusiliers, 16th Regiment, 96th Highlanders, and first battalion Rifle Brigade. The Shah watched the march of these excellent troops with great interest. The Prince of Wales rode past at the head of the Rifle Brigade, as its commander. After this march past the Queen a few manceuvres of action were performed, representing the defence of Windsor against an enemy supposed to have crossed the Thames between Boveney and Bray. The Shah was much pleased, and gave the Duke of Cambridge a beautiful Persian scimetar, with a gold hilt, in a scabbard of purple velvet. At seven o'clock their Majesties left the park, and the Shah got back to London between nine and ten. He was too late to dine with Lord Granville and the Corps Diplomatique at the Foreign Office, as he had intended, but he went there for half an hour about midnight, when Lord and Lady Granville entertained a distinguished company.

WEST INDIA DOCK AND GREENWICH.

The Shah had arranged to see the Bank of England, as well as the Tower of London, before going down the river to Blackwall and Greenwich, on Wednesday week; but he was too much fatigued by his efforts the previous day. He went, about one o'clock, in an open carriage, from Buckingham Palace to the Tower, but did not stop there to see the armoury and regalia. At the Tower Wharf, kept by a guard of honour of the Coldstreams, he embarked in the river steam-boat Princess Alice, which was accompanied by the Cupid, having on board the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Crown Prince and Princess of Russia, the Duke of Edinburgh, the Duke of Teck and Princess Mary, Prince Christian, and the Duke of Cambridge, all in civilian dress. A salute was fired from the Tower guns, and the two steamers moved down the river, followed by other boats, one bearing the official persons of the Admiralty Board. The river was crowded with ships, trarges, boats, and vessels of many different kinds. Their decks and rigging, as well as the wharves and roads on each bank, and windows and crane-stages of the warehouses, being thronged with people, it looked like all London upon the water and banks of the Thames, as it looks above Putney on the day of the University boat-race. Opposite the entrance to the West India Dock lay five of the floating steam fire-engines of the Metropolitan Fire Brigade, under the orders of Captain Shaw. They were closely lashed together in a line; and upon the deck of each stood the firemen, with the hose-pipes ready for a discharge. The word was given, and they all at once saluted the Shah with several hundred jets of water, thrown horizontally against the sides of the Princes Alice steam-boat, after which they cast up as many perpendicular jets to a great height in the air, with a very fine effect. The steam-boat conveying his Majesty and the Princes contered the West and Princesses were present.

VISIT TO LIVERPOOL.

VISIT TO LIVERPOOL.

On Thursday week the Shah went to Liverpool by the London and North-Western Railway from Euston-square. He started at ten o'clock, in the Royal saloon carriage of a special train, with four of his Princes and Ministers; but his Prime Minister, the Sadr Azim, stayed at Buckingham Palace. The Earl of Morley, Lord in Waiting, General Hardinge, Groom in Waiting, Colonel Byng, Equerry, General Sir Henry Rawlinson, and Mr. Ronald Thomson attended his Majesty. Lord Richard Grosvenor, M.P., and other directors of the railway saw him off at the Euston-square station. The train, stopping but once at Lichfield, made the run from London to Liverpool, 192 miles, in less than four hours and a half, reaching the Lime-street station at half-past two. The Shah was there received by the Earl of Sefton, the Mayor of Liverpool (Mr. E. Samuelson), Sir James Ramsden, Lord Sandon, M.P., Mr. Cross, M.P., and General Lysons, commanding the military district. The halls of the hotel and station were full of company, and Lime-street, with the open spaces around St. George's Hall, contained many thousands of people. There was an escort of the 7th Dragoon Guards, and several battalions of volunteer rifles and volunteer artillery kept the streets. The Shah entered St. George's Hall, where an address of welcome was presented by the Mayor, to which his Majesty replied, with a translation of his reply by Sir H. Rawlinson. A procession was then formed, and the Mayor conducted the Shah to the Townhall, which was tastefully decorated with flowers, flags, garlands, and other festive devices. After reposing a quarter of an hour in a private smoking-room, the Shah went into the Council Chamber, and partook of a luncheon provided for him and the company by the Mayor of Liverpool. His Majesty was placed in a chair of state at the head of the table, between the Mayor and Lord Sefton. His health was drunk, which he acknowledged with a bow. At five o'clock he was taken to the Prince's Landing Stage, and embarked in one of the Mersey f Landing Stage, and embarked in one of the mersey leafy decorated with bright carpets and silk curtains, and with beautiful hothouse plants and flowers. The rain had ceased, and the Shah was conveyed down the river to New Brighton, passing the large Atlantic steam-ships moored in the Sloyne, and getting a sight of the masts of shipping in the vast range of docks, both on the Liverpool and Birkenhead sides. His Majesty then returned, landing where he had embarked, and went by the North-Western Railway to Trentham, in Staffordshire where he arrived at eight o'clock. The Duke and Duchess shire, where he arrived at eight o'clock. The Duke and Duchess of Sutherland gave him a nobly hospitable reception. He walked in the gardens, which were illuminated that evening, and saw a game at bowls in the bowling-alley.

CREWE ENGINE FACTORY.

Leaving Trentham at half-past cleven on Friday, the Shah, accompanied by the Duke and by the Earl of Shrewsbury, went to Crewe, and saw the great railway locomotive-engine factory. One thing which attracted his notice was the conversion of pig iron into Bessemer steel. The cupola was tapped, and the fluid metal poured down a sand channel into the converting vessel. This was turned up, and the "blowing" commenced, with the visible result of a fierce and beautiful white flame streaming in a furious gale of wind from its mouth. Having glanced at the engines which force their tremendous draught through the melted metal, his Majesty passed to the cogging shop, where a ten-ton duplex steam-hammer was squeezing flat under its blows a huge red-hot bar of metal. Passing thence to the forge and rolling-mills, the Shah beheld an immense slab, white from the furnace, divided like a deal log, by the cutting action of a rapidly-driven steel saw. The slab of iron was sawn through in half a minute, though it measured 18 in. by 4 in. The saw runs at the rate of 13,000 ft. a minute, and its teeth are kept cold by a stream of water constantly directed against them. The next marvel was the thirty-ton duplex hammer—one of the tools designed by Mr. Ramsbottom, the late mechanical engineer to the company. This hammer displayed its strength on a great steel ingot drawn white from the furnace as the Shah approached. The lump of red-hot metal was attached to a traverser overhead, and was guided easily by one man in between the ponderous hammer blocks. These were set to work, and the shape of the mass altered visibly at each blow of the hammer. Other steam-hammers punching holes in tireblocks and expanding tires, and a tire-rolling mill, working with beautiful ease and accuracy, were inspected on the way to that he admired the industrial prosperity of Manchester, and hoped to make some improvements in Persia. After this, his Majesty got some luncheon, and then set out for Salford, the adjacent town on the other side of the Irwell, to see the cotton-mills of Messrs. Haworth and Co. The way was by Cross-street, Albert-square, Mount-street, Peter-street, Deansgate, Liverpool-road, Water-street, and Regent-road, to Messrs. Haworth's. Arrived there, he was conducted first to one of the lower rooms, where he saw the cotton in all the stages, from the preparation of the raw material up to the weaving. He was led to the room where the enormous flywheel of the engine revolves; but the longest stay was made in the weaving-room, were 1100 frames were at full work. The Shah seemed more interested here than in any other portion, because it is here that the material is converted into the finished article. He stood a few minutes at one of the frames, and saw its working. He was about to pass out of the room when, on a signal from Mr. R. Haworth, the shuttles were stopped in an instant, and all the women and girls, leaving the frames and coming forward with bright paper flags to the edges of the gangway in which the Shah was standing, burst out into "God save our noble Queen." Waving the little flags over the head of the Shah, they sang the whole of the National Anthem, his Majesty seeming lost in wonder at the seene before him. At the close of the singing he bowed his approval and thanks, which so pleased the women that they clapped hands and gave him a general cheer. It may be observed that there were between 800 and 900 workpeople on the premises, most of them females; indeed, with the exception of two or three men to look after the machinery, all the hands in the weaving-room were women and girls, which the Persians seemed scarcely able to understand. Before quitting the factory the Shah saw two finished pieces of cotton branded with an inscription in Persian, and in the same language he wrote in the visitors' book a record o

The Shah returned to London from the Duke of Sutherland's mansion in Staffordshire on Saturday morning, and went, in the afternoon, to the garden party, given by the Prince and Princess of Wales, at the Duke of Devonshire's villa at Chiswick. The illustrious, noble, and fashionable company at this entertainment was so numerous that a mere list of their names fills nearly three columns of the Times. Her Majesty the Queen was there. On Monday morning there was an inspection for his Majesty of the engines and men of the Metropolitan Fire Brigade, under Captain Shaw, in the gardens behind Buckingham Palace. In the afternoon his Majesty went to the Crystal Palace, with nearly all our Princes and Princesses, to see The Shah returned to London from the Duke of Sutherland's the plate-rolling mill. This last machine interested his Majesty very much, and he stood watching the red-hot slab passing backwards and forwards between the rollers, and growing gradually longer and thinner, till they were rolled into plates of 26 ft. by 2 ft. 6 in. in length and breadth, and a thickness, or rather a thinness, of only five-sixteenths of an inch. The eight-ton vertical steam-hammer stamping a steel plate at one decisive blow into a dome top for a locomotive boiler having been shown, his Majesty proceeded to the locomotive works. He was conducted through a forge and smithy containing 113 smiths' hearths and nineteen steam-hammers. The locomotive-engine shop, in which nineteen new engines are being constructed, was visited, and two nearly complete engines were lifted by the overhead travelling-crane, and carried out of the shop. Other shops were inspected; and Mr. Webb, locomotive superintendent to the London and North-Western Company, explained to the Shah the different processes. explained to the Shah the different processes.

VISIT TO MANCHESTER

It was two o'clock when the Shah arrived from Crewe at the London-road station, Manchester, which was transformed by hangings or spreadings of coloured cloth, and by profuse floral decorations, into a place, "half fancy-bazaar, half-conservatory," as the Manchester Guardian says. The Mayor of Manchester, the County High Sheriff (Sir James Ramsden), and the Lord Lieutenant received his Majesty as he left the train, amidst the cheers of a large company of spectators. and the Lord Lieutenant received his Majesty as he left the train, amidst the cheers of a large company of spectators. An escort of the 7th Dragoon Guards and the 101st (Bengal Fusiliers), the 19th Lancashire and 3rd Manchester Volunteers, all under the orders of General Lysons, did military honours to the foreign visitor. He entered an open carriage-and-four, which took him, in a procession of carriages, along Piccadilly, down Market-street, through St. Anne's-square and Kingstreet, to the Townhall. An immense crowd of people all the way greeted him with vociferous cheering. At the Townhall, amidst a company of ladies and gentlemen, his Majesty was bidden to take his seat in a gilt chair on a scarlet dais, and to hear the Town Clerk read an address. He replied in a Persian speech, which was translated by Sir H. Rawlinson to mean a special entertainment, consisting of gymnastic performances, the playing of the great fountains, and a display of fireworks. On Tuesday morning the Shah went to see the Tower of London, the Bank of England, and St. Paul's Cathedral; he returned westward, and visited Mr. Gladstone in Carlton House Gardens, the Houses of Parliament, sitting at the time, and Westminster Abbey. On Wednesday the Shah paid his farewell visit to the Queen at Windsor; and he now departs from amongst us, taking France next in his grand tour of Europe. We shall give some Illustrations of this week's proceedings.

FINE ARTS.

Messrs. Holloway and Son, the well-known printsellers, have just published a volume of engravings which reflects great credit on their enterprise, bearing in mind how uncertain it is that any work of the kind will now win remunerative appreciation in this country, however admirable the artistic skill engaged on it, however great the labour and outlay involved in its production. this country, however admirable the artistic skill engaged on it, however great the labour and outlay involved in its production. The publication we refer to is intended to form a suite to the similar work recently published in Paris, entitled "Les Collections Célèbres d'Euvres d'Art en France." The present volume, called "Works of Art in the Collections of England," consists of fifty folio plates, drawn by Edouard Lièvre, and engraved by Bracquemond, Courtry, Flameng, Greux, L'Hermite, Le Rat, J. Lièvre, Muselle, Rajon, Randall, and Valentin. The subjects comprise, among many others, specimens of ancient bronzes, Persian ware, crystals, Cellini and other metalwork, Henri Deux ware, Oriental and English china, Renaissance wood and ivory carving, Oriental cloisonné and Limoges enamels, repoussé armour, jade carving, and majolica ware. The specimens are, for the most part, judiciously selected either for their beauty, their rarity, or typical character. A few are from well-known sources, such as the collections of her Majesty, the British and South Kensington Museums; but the great majority are from private collections. The selection has, in consequence, proportionate novelty of interest to the general public. Among the illustrations are some of the choicest treasures in the collections of Barons Rothschild, Lord Overstone, Sir Richard Wallace, Sir Dudley C. Marjoribanks, and Messrs. Holford, Magniac, A. Morrison, A. Barker, J. Malcolm, J. Henderson, S. Addington, A. Fountaine, &c. Some idea is thereby afforded of the unrivalled wealth of works of art in private hands in this country. The volume is precious indeed, if only for the comprehensive representation which it affords of the arts of ornamentation in all ages. It is, however, from its illustrations of the present French school of etching that the publication derives its principal art-value. Objets d'art, similar to those depicted, may be seen in our public loan and permanent exhibitions, but no such volume of etchings has hitherto been published in England however great the labour and outlay involved in its production. The publication we refer to is intended to form a suite to the line" and mezzotint flourished among us. An inspection of these plates should convince our amateur practitioners and critics of etching that the art is susceptible of infinitely greater critics of etching that the art is susceptible of infinitely greater development than the loose, haphazard scratching which they find so clever and "suggestive." In every one of these plates will be found accurate draughtsmanship, complete modelling and light and shade, exquisitely precise elaboration of detail, and, above all, perhaps, consummate truth in the rendering of textures—a quality essential as regards the objects chosen for representation, to which etching, in skilful hands, lends itself with incomparable felicity. The sharpness and hardness of metal, the apparent softness of jade, the translucency of crystal, the lustre of majolica, the glaze of china or of Limoges enamel, and the dull surface of Oriental cloisonné work, the polish of ivory, the less hard surface of wood, are all discriminated with the nicest fidelity. In short, it is seldom that a points of twoy, the less hard surface of wood, are all discriminated with the nicest fidelity. In short, it is seldom that a work capable of affording such pure artistic pleasure, alike by the beauty of its execution and of the objects illustrated, has been brought under our notice. We may add that the whole of the plates, framed, may be inspected at Messrs. Holloway's new galleries, in Bedford-street, Strand.

The colossal equestrian statue of Sir James Outram, upon which Mr. Foley has been engaged some years, has been successfully cast, and is now erected for temporary exhibition in cessfully cast, and is now erected for temporary exhibition in the lower part of Waterloo-place, previous to its being shipped to Calcutta, where (on the Esplanade before Government House) it will form a worthy pendant to the same sculptor's noble statue of Lord Hardinge—which was similarly exhibited to the London public in the old courtyard of Burlington House, previous to being forwarded to its destination. We are engraving the statue of Sir James Outram, and shall therefore have another opportunity of describing a work that will certainly rank as one of the finest pieces of sculpture of our day. We are glad to announce also that the eminent sculptor has nearly completed the great statue of the Prince Consort for the Albert Memorial in Hyde Park.

An extraordinary blunder, as we think, is about to be perpetrated in the new National Gallery. Mr. E. M. Barry strongly advocated the use of ornamental tiles for the flooring, but instead of allowing the appointed architect, who is surely the most competent to decide, to follow his own judgment in this matter of detail, he has been directed (according to a statethis matter of detail, he has been directed (according to a statement by Mr. Ayrton to the House of Commons) to supply a wooden flooring. Now, it is obvious that encaustic tiling, being non-inflammable, is a perfectly safe substance to be placed near any warming apparatus, nor can it be ignited superficially; and when we remember how many public and private buildings have been destroyed through the contiguity of heating pipes to timber joists, or by the ignition otherwise of the wooden flooring, we are amazed that any wood should be needlessly introduced into a structure intended to contain our priceless national works of art. From experience at the Alexandra and national works of art. From experience at the Alexandra and Crystal Palaces, it is evident that the danger of fire may exist where least suspected; and doubtless the destruction caused at Muswell-hill and Sydenham was accelerated and extended by the use of wood in the flooring and elsewhere.

We have already announced the appointment by her Majesty's Commissioners for the London International Exhibitions of Mr. H. Cole as acting commissioner, with a salary of £1000 a year and a share in the profits of each annual exhibition. This appointment is to be followed by Mr. Cole's retirement from his post at the South Kensington Museum—a report of which was prematurely circulated some time back. A movecirculated some back. A movement is on foot to present a testimonial to Mr. Cole on his retirement from the office he has so long and actively filled in the South Kensington Museum.

The Queen has bestowed her patronage on an exhibition of works of art to be held in Aberdeen in August. Her Majesty has also placed at the disposal of the committee several works in various departments of art in her collection at Windsor. Owners of works of art in the counties of Aberdeen, Banff, and Kincardine will likewise contribute.

A full-length portrait of the Right Hon. Sir James Fergusson, late Governor of South Australia, by Mr. Sydney Hodges, commissioned by the inhabitants of the colony for the New University building at Adelaide, is being exhibited in the Australian Court of the International Exhibition.

A memorial of the late Field Marshal Sir George Pollock, Bart., Constable of the Tower, by Mr. E. J. Physick, has been placed in Westminster Abbey.

We understand that the drawings and sketches of the late Mr. Edwin Weedon (for twenty-five years marine artist to this paper) will be sold by Messrs. Christie and Manson on Thursday next, July 10.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The six repetition performances of last week (already specified) were followed by "La Sonnambula," with Mdlle. Albani as Amina—for the last time this season—on Monday; and "L'Elisir d'Amore," with Mdlle. Smeroschi as Adina, on Tuesday, for the first time this season.

On Thursday the long-promised Italian version of Auber's "Les Diamans de la Couronne" was to be brought out, with Madame Adelina Patti as Caterina. Our comment on this event must necessarily be deferred until next week. The opera was announced for repetition this (Saturday) evening. "Marta."

Next week—the last but two of the season at this establishment—will commence with a repetition of "II Trovatore;" "Le Nozze di Figaro" being promised for Tuesday, with Mdlle. Albani's first performance of the character of the Countess.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

Last week's performances here were also repetitions of operas as previously given. This week commenced with the third representation of "Mignon," followed, on Tuesday, by "Il Trovatore," on Thursday by "Rigoletto;" Norma being announced for to-night—forming, again, a series of repetitions.

On Monday "Faust" is to be repeated, and on Tuesday "Le Nozze di Figaro" is to be given, for the first time this season.

The production of Balfe's posthumous opera—Italianised as "Il Talismano"—will be the next specialty here.

Yesterday (Friday) week, Prince Poniatowski gave his annual concert—this time in Drury Lane Theatre, the principal artists of Mr. Mapleson's opera company having contributed to a series of varied performances which also included (between the parts) Madame Ristori's recitation of the fifth canto of "Francesca da Rimini." The concert commenced with Prince Poniatowski's Mass in F, of which work we spoke in detail when noticing its original production. The solos in the mass were sung by Mdlle. Titiens, Madame Trebelli-Bettini, and Signori Campanini and Agnesi; the two first-named artists, Madame Nilsson, MM. Capoul and Naudin, Signor Rota, and others having contributed to the miscellaneous selection which formed the second part of the consert. The fête given at the Crystal Palace on Monday—on the occasion of the visit of the Shah of Persia—included a miscellaneous concert, which took place on the Handel orchestra. The programme consisted chiefly of familiar music, the solo singers having been Mdlle. Marimon, Madame Irene de Sassi, M. Naudin, and Signori Urio and Foli. The specialties of the occasion were—a "Persian Love Song," for female chorus and band; and a characteristic orchestral piece, entitled "Kurroglou." Both these are adaptations by Mr. Manns: the former from a movement in Glinka's Russian opera, "Rustan and Ludmilla," with English text supplied by Mr. Sutherland Edwards; the latter derived from a national air given by Mr. Carl Engel in his work "On the Study of National Music"—the theme being associated with traditions of a celebrated Persian bandit minstrel named "Kurroglou." In the performances of the day the choir and band of the Crystal Palace were largely reinforced from various sources, several military bands having contributed greatly to the effect of the full pieces. Mr. Manns conducted with his invariable efficiency.

The second year's "National Music Meetings" at the Crystal Palace (established by Mr. Willert Beale) were inaugurated on Wednesday by formal preliminary proceedings, in preparation for the public competitions. These commenced on Thursday, and are to be continued to-day (Saturday), and on Tuesday and Thursday next—the distribution of prizes, followed by a grand concert and other proceedings, being announced for July 12. Of the first three days' competitions we must speak next week.

The miscellaneous concerts of the week included those of Mr. Sydney Smith and Mdlle. Carreno, well-known pianists; Mr. John Thomas, the eminent harpist; M. Jules Lefort, the accomplished baritone; and Signor Arditi, whom it is scarcely necessary to characterise as one of the few thoroughly competent operatic conductors of the day. M. Van Biene, the skilful violoncellist of Her Majesty's Opera, announces a matinée, to take place to-day (Saturday), at Tavistock House.

On Monday next the sixty-first season of the Phiharmonic Society will end with the eighth concert of this year's series.

The "Maison Neuve" of Victorien Sardou was produced on Monday for the first time in England. This celebrated comedy is in five acts, and was brought out in 1866, in Paris. Though called a comedy, it partakes more of the nature of drama. It affords, however, another opportunity for the display of Mdlle. Desclée's peculiar talent. It also abounds in very strong situations, and some of the scenes are hazardous. M. Daubray, who has not appeared for three years, played the part of the old-fashioned Bourgeois de Paris with great unction. M. GAIETY.

The extraordinary talents of Mr. George Conquest, both as an actor and an acrobat, which now for many seasons have made the Grecian pantomime a series of marvels, naturally raised a desire that these extraordinary feats of agility and exhibitions of histrionic power should be brought before a West-End audience and submitted to the test of the highest judgment. This trial of wit and athletic ingenuity has been long announced, and on Monday the first performance took place. head in which Mr. Conquest is wont to hide his diminished form is introduced, and is made to display the results of mechanical contrivance in an entirely unprecedented manner. The initial act is devoted to acting, showing how Dan Duxford is given up to drink, and how Nicholas Flinton (Mr. G. H. Macdermott), a supposed physician, tempts him to suspect his wife, whose brother has returned unknown to himself, and been wandering with his sister among the ruins. Miss Loseby personates the suffering wife, and her sufferings are pathetically pronounced. To Dan's inebriety and jealousy Mr. Conquest does full justice; and his son, as a Manx youth and the teaspirit Robur, is seen in acrobatic business to follow admirably in his father's steps. As a spectacle, the whole affair is superb, and the music, by Mr. Oscar H. Barrett, is of rare excellence.

Miss Clive was to have performed on the morning of Saturday at the Queen's some selections of "Romeo and Juliet," but was unable to appear owing to an attack of rheumatism. NATIONAL SPORTS.

Last week we made a few remarks upon the general features of the Stockbridge meeting, dwelling particularly upon the importance of its two-year-old races. These contests were as interesting as ever, and Lemnos, Couronne de Fer, and Mr. Winkle are a trio which, we doubt not, will worthily maintain the fame of the Stockbridge youngsters. Lemnos especially, seeing how he beat Couronne de Fer at Ascot, would seem to be a particularly smart colt, though, for our part, we are not quite satisfied with the result of that race, and shall rather expect to see the tables turned when the two rivals next oppose each see the tables turned when the two rivals next oppose each other. Mr. Bruton's colt is bred quite to order, being an own brother to that excellent mare Frivolity, and was very highly see the tables turned when the two rivals next oppose each other. Mr. Bruton's colt is bred quite to order, being an own brother to that excellent mare Frivolity, and was very highly tried by his trainer before he was so unexpectedly defeated in his first essay by his stable companion, Tomahawk. That, indeed, was a dreadful "upset," and how it was accomplished by such a second-rate creature must for ever remain a mystery. However, other good animals have been defeated by their inferiors in their maiden race—as, for example, Dundee, Kingcraft, Favonius, and Sterling; and no doubt some horses, like men, are nervous on a first appearance. Before parting from Stockbridge we cannot help remarking how very bare the programme would have been stripped of the two-year-old contests and the Cup. Really the handicaps and selling races which form the padding of the card are quite contemptible, inferior to the "sport" which can be seen any day at Croydon or Kingsbury, and altogether unworthy of this old historic meeting. Half-mile scurries have, perhaps, their hidden use; but it is quite certain that those who originally laid out Stockbridge racecourse did not contemplate that it would one day become a battle-ground for tenth-rate crocks, struggling one with another to show which can exhibit the greatest deficiency of stamina in the shortest distance of ground. The meeting of the week has, of course, been the July meeting, the pleasantest, if the least exciting, of all the Newmarket gatherings. Ecossais, of course, had it all his own way in the July Stakes, and we are more than ever convinced that nothing will get near him as a two-year-old, though we certainly share the prevalent doubt whether his fore legs are sufficiently strong to stand the strain of a preparation for the Derby. Prince Charlie won a handicap over the T.Y.C. with 10 st. on his back, giving exactly a stone to Blenheim, and beating him by a head—a wonderful performance. Achievement and Lady Elizabeth had each a very pretty turn of speed in their time, but n excited no interest. Gulston and Long, however, created a great sensation in the race for the Silver Goblets, by proving utterly unequal to hold their own against Trower and Knollys, who, to the surprise of everybody, ran right away from them. The London men were, no doubt, feeling the effects of the hard work they had done during the regatta; but still, looking to their previous performances, they should have been able to make a better fight of it. The Grand Challenge Cup fell to the London eight, which proved much too strong for the Eton boys; the Diamond Sculls to Mr. Dicker a very promising povice; and Diamond Sculls to Mr. Dicker, a very promising novice; and the Thames Challenge Cup to the Thames Rowing Club, whilst the Visitors and the Wyfold Cups were respectively carried off by the Irish crews. The Irishmen were in great force this year, and the Kingstown Harbour crew, especially, was a remarkably good one, possibly the fastest four on the river.

The first of the annual contests between the amateur and professional cricketers took place at the Oval last week—the Gentlemen v. Players of the South—and resulted in an easy victory for the former, who won the match by eight wickets. It may be said to have been secured by the two Graces, as Mr. W. G. Grace scored 134 runs, and his brother 74, not out—pretty well for one day's work. The Gentlemen and Players again met last Monday, this time at Lord's, and the latter had the pleasure of fielding out for the whole day, as their opponents completely defied all the bowling that could be brought against them, scoring a total of 278 for the loss of only five wickets. Of this number the invincible Mr. Grace contributed more than half, carrying out his bat for the day for the magnificent score of 151 runs. The match was ultimately won by the Gentlemen in one innings with 55 runs to spare, their total reaching 315, while the Players in their two innings only scored 260. The cricketmatch between Lancashire and Yorkshire closed on Tuesday evening, Yorkshire winning by 64 runs.

The second of the annual contests between the amateur athletes of the North and South of England took place at athletes of the North and South of England took place at athletes of the North and South of England took place at Lillie Bridge last Saturday, and proved, as it was feared, a very hollow affair for the South. Indeed, the Northerners only won the quarter; for which, however, they ran first and second, and divided the half mile; all the other prizes falling to their opponents. Scott won the three-mile race very easily in 15 min. 34 sec.; and Slade scored just as decided a victory in the mile, which he covered in 4 min. 30 sec. A match at the last-named distance between these two celebrities would be as interesting as the famous Scott-Chinnery race, a year or two ago; but we suppose it cannot be arranged.

The crops over the entire north of Ireland are reported to look unusually well. Flax, which is naturally regarded with great interest in Ulster, in consequence of its close connection with the staple trade of the province, is remarkably promising.

A procession of Good Templars, two miles and a half long, promenaded the streets of Bristol on Monday, from Queen-square to the Zoological Gardens, Clifton. There were 8000 Good Templars in the procession, and nearly 20,000 at the gardens. On Tuesday the Good Templars' Conference began, and continued during the week.

SCIENTIFIC RESULTS OF THE MONTH.

The visit of the Shah of Persia to this country recalls public attention to the relations of Persia and India, and also to the question of the practicability of opening a great highway to the East through Persia, by the establishment of a railway which shall connect the European and Indian systems. The Shah appears to be sincerely anxious that his country shall be opened to European enterprise, and with that view he has concluded a very ill-judged arrangement with Baron de Reuter, of which the chief provisions are as follow:—The Baron is to undertake the construction of a railway between the Caspian and the Persian Gulf, and of such other railways or tramways as he may think fit. This privilege is accorded for seventy years, and excludes competition. The land for the lines, if belonging to the Government, is to be given free. The materials are to be imported free of duty. The works are to be begun within fifteen months from the date of the concession, and £40,000 is to be lodged as caution-money in the Bank of England, to be forfeited to the Government if the works are not begun within the specified time; but nothing is said as to when they are to be finished. The Government are to receive 20 per cent of the net profits, and after seventy years the lines are to revert to the Government. The mines, forests, and waste lands of Persia are to be placed at the disposal of the concessionaire, on condition of his paying to the Government 15 per cent of the profits; also the canals, wells, and watercourses, subject to the further 2 per cent as a sinking fund, which guarantee, however, only comes into operation after the construction of the line connecting Rescht, on the Caspian, with Ispahan. The concessionaire is also to collect the customs for twenty-five years, paying the Government £20,000 a year more than it now receives: The 7 per cent interest is to be taken from the proceeds of the customs, mines, &c., of which the effect would be, if the undertaking were carried out, to leave Persia without any revenue. It is The visit of the Shah of Persia to this country recalls public attention to the relations of Persia and India, and also to the can have been used with the Shah and his Ministers to have induced them to accede to an arrangement such as this, of which the effect would be to transfer the whole power of the State to the concessionaire and his assignees. A railway from the Caspian to the Persian Gulf could subserve no commercial objects, as there is scarcely any trade in that direction; but, as Russia is supreme upon the Caspian, it would open a highway for that Power into the heart of Persia. It does not appear probable that the capital required for such great works in so poor, thinly-peopled, and sterile a country as Persia is likely to be obtained in England. In many parts of India the railways are unproductive, although all the circumstances are more propitious to the acquisition of a profit than exist in the case of any of the lines now proposed to be constructed in Persia. No doubt this country is interested in promoting the formation of a line passing through Persia as part of a great trunk railway connecting the Eastern and Western railway systems. But such a line would run through Tabreez and Teheran to Herat, whereas the line now proposed from Rescht to Ispahan could be profitable to no one, and would be politically serviceable to Russia alone. If Persia should find all her resources impounded to pay interest on the capital expended in unproductive works,

Russia alone. If Persia should find all her resources impounded to pay interest on the capital expended in unproductive works, the prospect may perhaps be considered doubtful whether the interest would long continue to be paid.

An interesting paper was lately read before the American Society of Civil Engineers upon the character and position of neutral axes as seen by polarised light. The experiments which determined the position of the neutral axis were made upon pillars, tubes, and other objects in glass; and the strains were determined by the colours of polarised light sent through the glass, which were influenced by the tension obtaining in different parts. Professor Airey some time since determined the strains existing in the members of a steel truss by the sound it emitted when struck, a duplicate piece being loaded until it gave the same note, when, the load being known, the strain became known also.

strain became known also.

It is reckoned that the quantity of solar light which falls on a square foot of the earth's surface in the year would suffice to heat 430,000 lb. of water 1 deg. centigrade. This gives an expression for the mechanical energy of the light; and as we also know the rapidity of the vibrations to produce the different colours, we can deduce the density of the medium in which the luminiference waves are prepared. It has been which the luminiferous waves are propagated. It has been reckoned that 0 036 lb. of carbon are produced on each square foot of land by vegetation, which, if used to generate power, would only produce 1474th part of the power represented by the energy of the light.

M. Faye has contributed to Les Mondes an able paper explanatory of his theory of the sun, the principal points of which are as follow:—1. A nebulous or chaotic fluid mass formed of gas and of mixed vapours raised to a very high temperature, with a movement of rotation and cooling by superficial radiation; 2, formation of a photosphere through condensation of the vapours of the external layer, and at the same time separation of the chromosphere formed of hydrogen relatively cold, but at a temperature superior to the point of dissociation of nearly all its compounds; 3, maintenance of this dazzling photosphere by way of vertical ascending and descending currents at all points of the surface; 4, special modifications introduced into the rotation by the continual play of the vertical currents; 5, whirling phenomena

4, special modifications introduced into the rotation by the continual play of the vertical currents; 5, whirling phenomena (spots) produced over all the surface by this special mode of rotation; and, 6, circulation of solar hydrogen due to the action of these whirling movements in the red layer.

A 12-inch gun has been constructed by Krupp firing a ball which weighs 700 lb, with 130 lb, prismatic powder. It is stated that 230 rounds have been fired from this gun without injury. The barrel is 22 ft, long, and the weight is 33 tons. It is said that a steel shell from this gun will penetrate a 15-in. armour plate. Our readers will recollect that many years since Our readers will recollect that many years since armour-plate. we maintained that the minimum thickness for ironclads at that time should be 18 in. of armour on the sides, backed with 4 ft. of oak, and a 24-in-turret. The Devastation, only 11 in. thick, is already penetrable, and will be antiquated and useless in a very few years. Krupp is about to produce a 14-in. gun, which will project a ball weighing 11,000 lb. We again repeat, however, that these high-pressure guns are a mistake. What we want is a combination of the gun and rocket, whereby with a very moderate attenuate of gur any desired amount of energy at very moderate strength of gun any desired amount of energy at long range can be given to the shot. It will probably be years before this plain truth is apprehended, or at least before it is made to bear fruit.

Messrs. Smith and Locke are endeavouring to introduce into this country from America their method of casting metals under compression, which differs very little from the method employed some years since by Sir Joseph Whitworth, unless it be in some immaterial details. We cannot discern any superiority in their process to entitle it to a preference over the methods with which we have long been familiar, and it appears to us that this is one of the inventions which have been carried across the Atlantic and then reimported as a novelty. Messrs. Smith and Locke are endeavouring to introduce into

It has been suggested that some of the mysterious fires which occasionally burst out in cotton and other mills may be caused by the action of the belting.

LIFE-BOAT SERVICES.

LIFE-BOAT SERVICES.

A meeting of the Royal National Life-Boat Institution was held, on Thursday, at its house, John-street, Adelphi—Mr. Thomas Chapman in the chair. Various rewards and payments, to the amount of £1256, were voted on some of the 233 life-boat establishments of the society. Life-boats have been sent by the institution, during the past month, to Chichester Harbour, and to Arklow, Ireland, in the place of the boats previously on those stations. The new life-boat recently forwarded to Plymouth was presented to the society by Mr. J. G. Hubbard, in memory of his late son, Mr. Francis Edward Hubbard, a midshipman in the Royal Navy. Miss Smithers, of Newark, has transmitted the cost of a life-boat, to be named the Ladies' Own, the amount having been raised, during the past two or three years, chiefly through her exertions. A larger life-boat was ordered to be sent to Blakeney, Norfolk. The Good Templars are successfully collecting the funds for a life-boat. Other contributions were announced, including £10 3s. Sd. collected on board the steam-ships Natal and Mazeppa by Mr. W. C. Barker and Captain Dryden, and £6 5s. collected in annual subscriptions by Captain Reynolds, of Uckfield. The institution has received a legacy of £450, baqueathed to it by the late Mrs. M. J. Robertson, of Kelso; and legacies, each of £200, on behalf of the late Mrs. H. M. Eddison, of Leeds, and Miss M. A. Hamilton, of Harrogate. Reports were read from Captain J. R. Ward, R.N., the inspector, and Captain D. Robertson, R.N., the assistant inspector of life-boats to the institution, on their visits to the coast during the past month.

The first railway in the Isle of Man was opened for traffic on Tuesday. The line is open from Douglas to Peel.

The Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury having certified to the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt that the surplus revenue of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, beyond the expenditure thereof for the year ended the 31st day of March, 1873, amounted to £5,586,322 0s. 5d., the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt have given notice that £1,396,580 10s. 1d., being one fourth part of the said surplus, will be applied, in the quarter ending the 30th day of September, 1873, towards the reduction of the National Debt.

The revenue abstract issued on Monday places the total receipts for the quarter ended June 30 at £17,681,114, and for the year at £75,896,371. As compared with the corresponding periods of past receipts there is a net decrease of £712,393 on the quarter, and a net decrease of £369,660 on the year. Excise and stamps are the best-sustained branches of revenue: but customs, telegraphs, and property tax are all year. Excise and stamps are the best-sustained branches of revenue; but customs, telegraphs, and property tax are all retrograding from the high level obtained in 1872.—The Treasury accounts issued on Tuesday night, as far as the receipts are concerned, add nothing to the information contained in the revenue returns. It appears, however, that during the first quarter of the financial year the expenditure amounted to £20,574,363, as compared with £18,175,391 twelve months ago. The balance in the Bank of England is £5.851,744.

The Vice-Chancellor, the Mayor, members of the Corporation, volunteers, and a number of other persons, quickly assembled at the railway station, where a carriage with four greys was in readiness; but after waiting till half-past two the Mayor and Corporation left the railway station, being by that time convinced that a hoax had been perpetrated. The telegram which vinced that a hoax had been perpetrated. The telegram which caused all the commotion bears a blank stamp, the date in the centre of the word "Cambridge" having the appearance of being filled in with pencil. The local post-office authorities, it is said, disavow any knowledge of such message.
